Q, q, the seventeenth letter of the Latin alphabet, and one of the guttural mutes, equivalent to the Greek koppa (Ϟ). It was a superfluous character; and as the Greek koppa became entirely obsolete, so there was a manifest tendency in Latin to get rid of Q. Thus in the oldest inscriptions the forms pequdes, equus, quum, quocirca, occur instead of pecudes, pecunia, cum, quocirca. So the original forms quojus, quon, quor (quare), became cujus, cui, cur; and even for quod, cuol is found. II. Relations of Q with other letters. 1. In Latin itself the only change is into C, of which examples are given above: in the composition and inflection of words this change frequently occurs: e. g. quatio, percutio; sequor, secutus. During the Republican period, qu does not occur before u: either quom or cum is written, equos or ecus, etc. 2. Qu in Latin sometimes corresponds to π in Greek: e. g. quinq e, equus, sequor: πέμπε, ἵππος, ἐπομαι; also to τ: e. g. quis, que, quattuor: τίς, τή, τέτταρα. III. Changes of Q (or rather of qu) in the Romance languages. 1. Into c: e. g. Lat. coquus, antiquus, quomodo; It. coco, antico, come; Fr. comme. 2. Into g (only in the middle of words): e. g. Lat. aequalis; It. eguale; Fr. égal; Lat. aquila, Fr. aigle. 3. In Fr. q is sometimes omitted: e. g. Lat. aqua, coquere, sequi; Fr. eau, cuire, sui.

IV. As an abbreviation, Q represents most freq. the praenomen Quintus, but also stands for Quaeator, que, quinquennialis, etc. S. P. Q. R., senatus populusque Romanus.

quum (better quom or cum). Of time, when, since, as, after that, since that, as soon as, etc. Const.: in oratio recta usu. foll. by Indic. when the clause is categorical, and denotes time merely, the events described by the two clauses not being spoken of as standing in the relation of cause and effect; but when this relation is implied, or even when the clause with quum describes only one of several concurring causes, the Subj. is gen. used: in oratio obliqua it is always employed: qui non defendit injuriam neque propulsat a suis, quum potest, injuste facit, Cic.: praeclare facis, quum eorum tenes memoriam, you do well in cherishing their memory, id.: multi anni sunt, quum ille in aere meo est, since, id. With Subj.: equites quum se in castra recipere, adversis hostibus occurrerant, Caes. (II) quum with Subj. is esp. used by way of substitute for the participles wanting in Latin (e.g. perf. part. act. and imperf. part. pass.); and in cases where the Abl. absol. is for some reason or other inadmissible: quum Lentulus Romam venisset, aditu Caesaris perterritus, ex urbe profugit, id.: aquilifer, quum magna multitudo hostium premere-tur, aquilam intra vallum projecit, id.

2. Quum (cum) maxime, and in one word, quummaxime (cummaxime), particularly. Esp. with adv. of time: nunc quum maxime, now of all times, now in particular, Ter.: also absol.: quum maxime volo te dare operam, by all means, id. (II) ut cum maxime, as much as ever: Pl. (III) quum maxime = just when: v. maxime, II. 2. Ter. 3. Quum (cum) . . . tum, while . . . so too, not only . . . but also, both . . . and (see also tum): fortuna quum in reliquis rebus, tum praecipue in bello plurimum potest, Caes.: quumque plurimas et maximas commoditates amicicia contineat, tum illa nimis praestat omnibus, quod bona spe praelucet in posterum, Cic. II. As a causal particle, whereas, since, seeing that; although; with Subj.: quum sit in nobis consilium, ratio, prudentia, necesse est deum haec ipsa habere majora, id.: quum quisque operam navare cuperent, paulum hostium impetus tardatus est, as all were eager, Caes.: quae quum ita esset . . . tamen, although this was so, Cic. For quippe quum, and utpote quum, v. quippe and utpote.

R, the eighteenth letter of the Latin alphabet, and one of the liquids. It corresponds in general to Indo-European r (which however is sometimes represented in Latin by l; v. letter L), and to Greek ρ. II. In many Latin words an original s, standing between two vowels, has been changed to r; e. g. asa, lases, mellosem, Valesius, have become ara, lares, mellorem, Valerius. So also dirimo is formed from dis-emo, and dir-(h)ibeo from dis-habeo. In neuter nouns of the type of genus, the oblique cases, generis, etc., were originally genēs-is, etc. In Greek, when σ stands between two vowels, it often vanishes, and thus to generis corresponds γενός. So again, in such pairs of words as νύξ, nux, from orig. (s)nusa, while the σ in Greek between the vowels has disappeared, the s in Latin has changed to r. This change, however, is not uniformly found; s in many words has remained unaltered between vowels; quaeso maintains itself beside quaero, and nasus beside naris. A similar change to that above mentioned sometimes takes place in final s; arbores, colos, honos, labos, have become arbor, color, honor, labor: the original sound, however, is also found at the end of these words. It is possible (though not proved) that the final r of the passive voice originated from the addition of the reflexive pronoun to the persons of the active voice, so that amor=amo-se, amatur=amat-se, etc.

2. In meridies, r has been substituted for d through the influence of dissimilation. 3. r is elided for euphony in pejoro for perjoro, in creresco for crebresco, etc. 4. r sometimes exchanges its place with the adjoining vowel; e. g. from the roots ter, cer, ster come the perfects trivi, crevi, stravi, and the perf. part. tritrus, cretus, stratus. III. Changes of r in the Romance languages. 1. Into l: this is the most frequent change: e. g. Lat. arbor, It. albero; Lat. altare, Fr. autel, flairer, pèlerin. 2. Into d: Lat. quaerere, varus; It. chiedere, rado. 3. rs into ss: Lat. dorsum; It. dosso. 4. r often changes its place; Lat. stuprum, It. strupo; Lat. verve, temperare, Fr. brebis, tremper. 5. When, by the disappearance of a vowel of a Latin word, the combination mr is formed, in French it is changed to mbr; Lat. num(e)rus, cam(e)ra; Fr. nombre, chambre; the same phenomenon appears in Sp. hombro from Lat. hum(e)rus. So nr in French becomes ndr; Lat. gen(e)r, pon(e)re; Fr. gendre, pondre; and lr becomes ldre, further changing to udre by vocalization of l; Lat. mol(e)re, sol(ve)re, Fr. moudre, soudre. IV. As an abbreviation, R signifies Romanus, also Rufus, recte,

S, indecl. n. or (agreeing with littera) f. the nineteenth letter of the Latin alphabet. Its form was taken from that of San in the Doric alphabet of Cumae, which had been itself derived from the Phoenician Shin. The Latin sibilant thus represented corresponded phonetically to, and was descended from, a primitive Indo-European sound which in Sanskrit was represented by s and sometimes by ś. Latin s in the middle of words corresponds to Greek σ. Initial s has as its regular representative in Greek the spiritus asper; thus we have sal = ἅλς; salio = ἅλλομαι (for ἁλ-γομαι); sedeo = ἕζομαι; semita = ἡμι-; septem = ἑπτά; sequor = ἑπομαι; sex = ἕξ; serpo = ἔρπω; silva = ῥα-φῆ; sus = ὄς (Gr. ὄς, however, being also found). Initial Latin s sometimes represents original sv; cf. salum with Eng. swell; sopor and somnus (for sopnus) with Skr. svap-nas; sudo with Skr. sviḍ-jāmi: in these cases sometimes σ, sometimes the spir. asp., sometimes even the spir. lenis, corresponds in Greek, cf. σάλος, ὑπνος, ἰδῖω. In the earlier periods of the Latin language, before z came into use, ζ in words borrowed from the Greek, was represented by ss; thus μαζα became massa, Ἀττικίζω atticizzo, κωμάζω comissor. Original initial s before a consonant has been lost in many Latin words: as caedo, castrum, cena, cutis, fallo, fides, pituita, taurus, tego, torus, etc. In instances like those of scribo beside γράφω, scruta beside γράφω, etc., we are to regard the s as original, and preserved in Latin, but lost in Greek.

II. s had, as in English, two different sounds, a sharp and a flat (or weak). It had the sharp sound at the beginning of words, as also in the middle of words before and after other consonants, and hence can be followed by the sharp mutes only (c, p, t). But between vowels it had the weaker sound, which was like that of English z, or of s in Fr. and Eng. rose. Hence in this position it was often changed to r (see article on letter R). Final s had the weak sound, and therefore could be preceded by b, as in urbs, plebs, abs. Its weakness led to its frequent disappearance, as in such nominatives as nauta (ναύτης), poeta, and in ille, iste, etc. Its loss took place especially in the popular Latin of the oldest, and again of the most recent, period, before and after the influence of a living literature tended to conserve the sound. Hence in the ante-classical poets down to the time of Cicero, final s was often dropped before words beginning with a consonant, as Fulvius Nobilior, vivus per, gravi terra, Hyperionis cursum. Hence also arose the secondary forms of the second person sing. of pass. and dep.

verba, as pateris for pateris, amabere for amaberis, etc.; and perhaps the Gen. ae. (for ai) of the first declension is to be explained as having arisen from ais. Hence, too, such forms as ain, satin, scin, viden for aisne, satisne, scisne, videsne; also mage for magis and the like. III. Changes of s within the Latin language. 1. As we have seen, between vowels it very commonly becomes r. 2. It is assimilated before f in the compounds of dis: e.g. differe, difficilis, diffuso. 3. With the gutturals it combines to form x; e.g. rex = reg-s, pax = pac-s; so the perfects rexi, duxi, vexi, from rego, duco, veho. IV. In the Romance languages initial s commonly remains unchanged; sometimes in Ital. it becomes z; e.g. Lat. sapphirus, socculus: It. zaffiro, zoccolo. When followed by p, c, or t, it frequently has a prefixed e, and in French is often omitted; e.g. Lat. species, spiritus, Fr. espèce, esprit (Sp. espíritu); Lat. scribere, scala, stabulum; Fr. écrire (Sp. escribir), échelle, étable. S medial is often lost before a consonant in French, the omission (which did not take place in old Fr.) being indicated by a circumflex over the preceding vowel; e.g. Lat. episcopus, apostolus, asinus, bestia, pascere, crescere; Fr. évêque, apôtre, âne, bête, pâtre, croître, etc. Sometimes medial s becomes sc (It.) or ss (Fr.); e.g. Lat. vesica, It. vescicca, Fr. vessie; Lat. designare, Fr. dessiner; very rarely it is changed to r, as in orfraie from Lat. ossifraga, Marseille from Massilia. When medial s becomes final in French, it is sometimes changed to z, as in nez from nasus, chez from casa; or to x as in époux from sponsus, roux from russus, toux from tussis; the suffix -osus regularly becomes -eux. V. As an abbreviation, S denotes sacrum, semita, sibi, suis, etc. S. AS. D., sub ascia dedicavit. S. C., senatusconsultum. S. P., sua pecunia. S. P. Q. R., Senatus Populusque Romanus.

going to succeed nicely, Pl. C. In composition, the b remains unchanged before vowels and before d, d, j, l, n, s, t, v. Before c, f, g, p, r, it is usually assimilated. Before m it is sometimes unchanged, sometimes assimilated. Before some words commencing with c, p, or t, it assumes the form sus, by the rejection of the b from a collateral form subs (analog. to abs); e.g. suscipio, suspendo, sustineo. Lastly in the words suspicio, suspicio, suspiro, the b is elided. In composition, sub denotes 1. under; e.g. sub-mergo, to dip under. Hence it signifies (i) inferiority; e.g. sub-centurio, a sub-centurion. (ii) before adjectives and verbs it implies diminution=slightly; e.g. sub-agrestis, somewhat boorish; sub-rideo, to laugh slightly, to smile. (iii) secrecy; e.g. sub-orno, to incite secretly. (iv) substitution=instead of; e.g. sur-rogo, to cause to be chosen instead of another; suc-cedo, to come into another's place. (v) succession=after; e.g. sub-eo, to come after, or next. 2. from below, up; e.g. succedo, to come up; suscipio, to take up; suspicio, to look up. Hence with the implied notion of assistance; e.g. succorro, to run up (to help). 3. near, closely; e.g. subsequor, to follow closely; sub-inde, immediately after. [Cf. Skr. upa; Gr. ὑπὸ; Goth. uf (under). The initial s in Lat., compared with Skr. and Goth., presents a difficulty. Orig. p is weakened to b, as in ab and ob, q. v.]

2. As an initial, or when preceded only by s, it can, in pure Latin words, be followed by no consonant except r; the combinations tl, stl, and tm are found only in words borrowed from the Greek. Hence the original forms tlatus (from root of tollo, tolero; cf. τλήτός), stlis, stlocus, became latus, lis, locus. 3. t medial, followed by i and another vowel, had a tendency, even in the early period of the language, to be pronounced as a sibilant; this arose, as in the case of ci before a vowel, from the hardening of the i into a semi-vowel (y); and, as a consequence of the change affecting both combinations, and making them similar in sound, ti and ci came to be used interchangeably before a vowel in the MSS. and Inscriptions of the Roman decline. 4. The combination th did not come into general use till the time of Cicero: hence CARTACINIENSIS on the Columna rostrata.

II. Latin t corresponds to Skr. t (and sometimes th) and to Gr. τ. In accordance with Grimm's law, in Gothic (and low-German generally, including English) th regularly answers to it, and in Old High German (with which modern German commonly agrees) d. Thus we have Lat. tendo; Gr. τείνω; Goth. thanjan; Germ. dehnen; Lat. tolero; Gr. τράλω; Goth. thulan (Eng. thole); O. H. G. dolen (Germ. dulden); Lat. torreo; Gr. τίσσωμαι; Goth. thaursejan (Eng. thirst); Germ. dursten; Lat. tres; Gr. τρεῖς; Goth. threis (Eng. three); O. H. G. dri (Germ. drei). III. In the Romance languages t initial usu. remains unchanged. In the middle of words it sometimes becomes d; thus Lat. litus, It. lido; Lat. lutum, Sp. lodo; Lat. adjutare, Fr. aider. This change also often happens when t has become final by omission of a suffix, as in Fr. marchand from low Lat. mercatorum; Fr. plaid from Lat. placitum. Aigu, vertu, etc., were aigud, vertud in an earlier stage of the French language. In Spanish the change of Lat. t to d is particularly frequent; thus it is regularly seen in past participles, as hablado from Lat. fabulatum, oido from Lat. auditum, etc. The termination -aticus, which is frequent in low Lat., regularly becomes -aggio in It. and -age in Sp. and Fr.; thus Lat. silvaticus, It. selvaggio, Fr. sauvage;

Lat. viaticum, It. viaggio, Sp. viage, Fr. voyage. When te or ti in Latin is followed by a vowel, the e or i in the derived French word commonly disappears, and the t becomes c, s or ss; thus Lat. platea, Fr. place; Lat. annuntiare, Fr. annoncer; Lat. redemptio, Fr. rançon; Lat. ratio, Fr. raison; Lat. nutritio, Fr. nourrisson: the latter change is found in the derivatives of a number of Latin abstract substantives in -itia, as laetitia, Fr. liesse; Lat. tristitia, Fr. tristesse. In Italian, the Lat. ti followed by a vowel becomes gi; thus Lat. ratio, statio; It. ragione, stagione; or, more commonly, zi, as in the class of nouns of which navigazione from Lat. navigatio may be taken as a type. In Sp. the same Lat. combination becomes z, as in razon from Lat. ratio; or ci, as in Sp. nacion from Lat. natio, oracion from Lat. oratio. Lat. tr in the middle of a word in Italian and Spanish remains unchanged or becomes dr; in French, rr or r; thus Lat. latro, It. ladrone, Sp. ladron, Fr. larron; Lat. vitrum, It. vetro, Sp. vidrio, Fr. verre; Lat. petra, It. pietra, Fr. pietra, Fr. pietre; Lat. pater (patrem), It. padre, Fr. père. Lat. st in the middle of a word sometimes becomes in It. sc, in Fr. ss; as in Lat. angustia, It. angoscia, Fr. angoisse; Lat. ostiarius, It. usciera, Fr. huissier. IV. As an abbreviation, T. stands for Titus, Tl. for Tiberius; Tr. Tribunus; T. F. Testamenti Formula; T. F. C. Titulum faciendum curavit; T. P. Tribunicia potestas.

U, u (originally V, v, which character arose from the Greek Y), the twenty-first letter of the Latin alphabet, and the last in the natural vowel series. It did not correspond phonetically to Greek v, which, at least in the mature period of the Greek language, was pronounced like French u or German ü; ou is more commonly put for it by the Greeks in transliterating Roman names or other Latin words. II. Etymologically it answers to I.-E. and Skr. u, and therefore to Gr. v; thus Lat. sus, Gr. (σ)υς; Lat. nurus, Gr. νύς; Lat. lux, Gr. (ἀ)φύλακη; though it has often arisen from a modification of another vowel, as in ursus, cf. ἀρκτος; ulcus, cf. ἕλκος; humus, cf. χαμαί. The diphthong oe (orig. oi) is closely akin to u; cf. munio, moenia; punio, poena; unus, O. L. oinos. III. Unaccented u almost always becomes in French either o or ou; thus Lat. frumentum, voluntatem, Fr. froment, volonté; Lat. cubare, gubernare, nutrire, sufflare; Fr. couvrir, gouverner, nourrir, souffler. Accented u, if long by nature, remains unchanged; thus Lat. nudus, murus, luna, Fr. nu, mur, lune; if long by position, it remains unchanged, as in juste from justus, or becomes o, as in monde, onde, from mundus, unda, or ou, as in bouche, court, sourd, from bucca, cursus, surdus; if short, it almost always becomes ou, as in joug, loup, où, from jugum, lupus, ubi; in a few words, however, it changes to eu, as in fleuve, jeune, gueule, from fluvius, juvenis, gula. In Italian, ū is generally unchanged, as in duro, luna, from durus, luna; but ū often changes to o, as in gola, omero, from gula, humerus. The latter change is also common, when the u in Lat. is long by position, as in fondo, gotta, corso, from fundus, gutta, cursus. IV. As an abbreviation, V (for U) stands for uti; so V.V., uti voverant.

V, the twenty-second letter of the Latin alphabet. The character was derived from the Greek Υ . This letter bears to u the same relation as Lat. j (Eng. y in year) to i . Thus its sound was most probably like that of English w . From the easy interchangeability of the u - and w -sounds it arises that poets use silua for silva, larua for larva, evoluisse for evoluisse, and on the other hand tenuia for tenuia, and the like. Between two vowels there is often a disappearance of v , giving rise to contraction, as in delerunt, nostl, ditior, prudens, babus, for deleverunt, novistl, divitior, providens, bovibus; so also sis is for si vis, sultis for si vultis, Juppiter for Jovis pater, malo for mavolo (mage volo). It is to be observed that in some Latin words v has become initial by the loss of a consonant which originally preceded it; thus viginti is for dviginti, venio for gvenio, and voro for gvoro, and vapor most probably for kvapor (see those words). II. Latin v corresponds to I.-E. and Skr. v , and to Greek digamma. V occurs in many Latin words, whose Greek cognates contain no corresponding sound; but those cognates originally had a β , which in the course of time was lost; cf. ver (= veser), v(σ)ap, ἥρ; vestis, ἱσθής; vicus, οἶκος; vinum, οἶνος; viola, ῖον; veho, ὄχος; ovis, ὄvis; silva, ὑλη (= συλφα), etc. In the Germanic languages, v (High German w) corresponds to Lat. v ; thus Lat. vir, Goth. vair, O. H. G. wir, war; Lat. verbum, Goth. vaurd, O. H. G. wort; Lat. ventus, Goth. vinds, O. H. G. wint. In Irish, f answers to Lat. v when initial, as in fear, a man = Lat. vir. III. In the Romance languages, Lat. v commonly remains unchanged. In a few instances it becomes b , as in It. berbice, Fr. brebis, from Lat. verber; Fr. berger, from Low Lat. verviciarius; courbe, from Lat. curvus; corbeau, from Lat. corvulus; this change had probably shown itself in popular Latin at an early period. In a certain number of Italian and French words v has been commonly supposed to have been changed to gu or g ; thus Lat. vespa, Fr. guêpe; Lat. viscum, Fr. gui; Lat. vadam, It. guado, Fr. gué; Lat. vastare, It. guastare, Fr. gâter. These Latin words, however, Prof. F. M. Müller (Lectures on Language, II. p. 265) regards as having been first adopted and corrupted by the Germans, and afterwards readopted, with gu for the German w , by the Roman provincials. The etymological notes on such words in the following pages must be read subject to this correction. Medial v is frequently omitted in the Romance languages, as in It. rio, from rivus; Fr. aieul, paon, peur, viande, from aviolus, pavo, pavor, vivenda. As a final, v in French becomes f ; thus cerf, bref, neuf, boeuf, from cervus, brevis, novus, bovem. Before consonants it is vocalized into u , as in austruche, from avis-strucio (for struthio). IV. As an abbreviation V stands for vir, vivus, vixit, voto, vale, verba, etc.; $V.C.$, vir clarissimus; $V.C.P.$, voti compos posuit; $V.V.$, virgo Vestalis. 2. As a numeral, V stands for five, being in this case perhaps half of the X or cross, which was the symbol of ten.

X, x, the twenty-third letter of the Roman alphabet. It is found in the oldest Latin inscriptions known to us. It is a double consonant, like the Greek ξ, being substituted for cs; e. g. pax=pac-s, dixi=dic-si. As the other gutturals, g, q, and h, become c before s, x takes the place of the combinations gs, qs, and hs; e. g. rex=reg-s, coxi=coq-si, traxi=trah-si. In nix, and in the perfects of nitor, coniveo, vivo, the x arises from a guttural which was radical in each of these words, but disappeared in some of their parts; in the perfects fluxi, struxi, a (so-called) determinative g has been added to the root (flug, strug, for flu, stru). The sibilant element of x was very strongly pronounced, whence xs is written for x in some, though not the earliest, inscriptions; hence s sometimes remains alone before c and t, as in sescenti, Sestius, mistus (beside mixtus); in sedecim, se-ni, etc., the sibilant also is lost. As an initial, x appears only in a few Latin words, all of which are borrowed from the Greek. II. In Italian, x becomes s, ss, or sci, as in esempio from exemplum; testa from textus; tessere from texere; frassino from frazinus; coscia from coxa. In French it commonly changes to ss, as in aisselle from axilla, essaim from examen, cuisse from coxa, laisser from lazare, tisser from texere; or, less frequently, s, as in buis from buxus, frêne (through fresne) from frazinus, setier (through sestier) from sextarius. III. As an abbreviation, X stands for denarius and also for the number ten.

Y, y. Though (as was mentioned on letter U) the Latin u had a different sound from Greek u, yet in the early period of the language, it was used to represent the latter; thus we find Pulades, Eurudica; and Cicero tells us that Ennius wrote Bruges (for Φρύγες) and Burrus (for Βύρρος). But the letter Y was adopted into the later Roman alphabet as representative of v. It appears to have been already in use in Cicero's time; but its application was restricted to foreign words, and hence the forms Sylla, Tybris, pyrum, satyra, are to be rejected.

Z, z. This letter had a place in the oldest Roman alphabet, and occurred in the Carmen Saliare. It afterwards ceased to be written. In Cicero's time it again came into use, but only to represent ζ in words borrowed from the Greek. When in our MSS. of Plautus, zona, zonarius, zamla, badizo, trapezita are found, these forms must be attributed to the grammarians of the first century A.D., who adapted the orthography of the poet to that of their own period. In Plautus' time, initial ζ was represented in Latin by s, as in sona for ζώνη; medial ζ by ss, as in badisso, cyathisso, malacisso; so also comissor (from κομίζω). In the ecclesiastical and other late Latin writers z sometimes takes the place of initial di before a vowel in words borrowed from the Greek, as in zabolus, zaconus, zeta, for diabolus, diaconus, diaeta.

zāmīa, ae, f. = ζημία, hurt, damage, loss: Pl.
